The Student Government Association's presidential campaigns will pick up this week in anticipation of next week's election.

Signs, T-shirts, free food, campaigning in front of the Union, promises of low tuition, free printing and green initiatives are being planned by the three presidential tickets.

The tickets are Stephen Mortellaro and Brendon Rivard, Andrew Stein and Chace Peckham, and Brian Peterson and Andrick Lewis, running for president and vice president respectively.

To prepare for the coming week, Mortellaro and Peterson held campaign strategy meetings yesterday, and Stein planned to visit several Greek organizations during their Sunday night chapter meetings.

Student travels to D.C. summit

100 students learn about poverty activism

SYLVANA FERNANDEZ
Contributing Writer

Of more than 1,500 U.S. colleges and universities, UCF was among the 100 schools chosen to send a student representative to Washington for a summit about raising awareness on campus and in the local community about extreme global poverty and preventable disease.

Junior business management student Tahsin Nabid has been at the ONE Campaign's Power 100 Global Poverty Summit in Washington since Friday. Nabid is an advocate for the ONE Campus Challenge, a competition that encourages social justice activism, emphasizing the plight of Africa.

"Such unnecessary death and poverty is just stupid," he said. "Through efforts like the ONE Campus Challenge, my generation is becoming one of the most politically aware and engaged generations America has ever seen, especially in terms of global issues. The power of hundreds of thousands of students joining together can't be underestimated."

A united front could make all the difference for the one billion people who live on less than a dollar a day, Nabid said. Such people lack access to clean water and die from preventable and curable diseases such as tuberculosis and malaria.

The 100 schools invited were selected by the number of points they earned in the second annual competition. Through Nabid's efforts, UCF became one of two Florida universities on the list, along with the University of

Planetary science track finds its space at UCF

JORDAN KEYES
Contributing Writer

Laying the foundation for a potential planetary sciences degree program, the Department of Physics added a planetary sciences track to its doctoral and master's programs this semester to research all things planetary, from Saturn's rings to the possibility of extraterrestrial life.

The track was created through the efforts of a group of professors and instructors who had a special interest in planetary sciences. Assistant professor Joseph Harrington described the role of planetary scientists as "essentially astronomers who do Earth science research on other planets."

According to the UCF Planetary Sciences Group Web site, research in this field answers questions such as "How did our solar system form?" "Are there any other systems like ours?" and "Are we alone?"

Harrington said the track is the first step toward beginning a planetary sciences degree program at UCF.

"Planetary sciences is a degree program in and of itself at many universities,"

In a eulogy published in the Orlando Sentinel on Sunday, Cindy Anthony said her granddaughter "now has her angel wings and will be watching over so many other children."

Comedian Eliot Chang said he was breaking down the doors of Asian stereotypes.

"I can kick more doors open with my comedy than anything else," he said.

As part of his nationwide Barely Legal tour, Chang had about 200 people laughing and hollering the whole way through his act in the Visual Arts Building's auditorium.

The show was part of the Asian Pacific American Coalition's two-day Level Up Conference, where he brought his message: He's not a dog-eating, bad-driving, karate-chopping, Asian stereotype, and neither is anyone else.

Chang, who has been on Comedy Central, challenged students in the audience to be their own person, study their own culture, no matter what it is and stop worrying about what people think.

Santa Magadan, a freshman micro and molecular biology major, said the show was part of her inspiration to begin understanding her Cuban heritage.

"I admit I don't know much about my Cuban background, but I am starting to try to figure it out slowly," she said. "My boyfriend is very into his culture, which makes me want to. So that really did start it, and this is really making me go forward, like 'OK, I should find out more about mine, too.'"

Chang said he aimed to surprise the audience with a bold show. Most of his jokes were sexual, and many made fun of people who focus on race.

The topics ranged from drunken college hook ups to why some girls today talk like children and don't read.

"Whatever happened to books?" he said. "A book? I can't read this; it doesn't have a backlight."

He also had a question-and-answer session afterward, focusing on Asians acting black or white in the media.

"In the media, Asians are only cool if they've assimilated into other cultures," Chang said.

Chang explained his take on being Asian in a modern American society. He said that Asians are people who are born in an Asian country, and that people born in America are Americans.

"I'm not Asian, I'm American," Chang said, explaining that just because you're a specific ethnicity, you can be born into a completely different culture.

During the question-and-answer session,

Chang was asked what his specific ethnicity was. He said he doesn't tell people his country of descent because he is a representative of the whole Asian-American community.

May Wong, co-chair of the conference, said APAC brought Chang here "because we wanted different entertainment ... We've never had a comedian."

UCF alumnus Alex Eng volunteered for the Level Up Conference, and said the event was important for raising awareness.

"Not everyone knows about situations in the world," he said. "Even though we're a minority, things do happen to us."

"We laugh when other races make fun of us because we're used to it," he said.

In its third year, the Level Up Conference was a two-day conference for UCF students with workshops, speakers and other performances.

Question from student brings out strong words from Scalia

WEST PALM BEACH — A 20-year-old college student apparently riled Supreme Court Justice Antonin Scalia as his book tour wound through Florida.

Sarah Jeck, a political science major at Florida Atlantic University, was allowed to ask the justice a question during a packed luncheon Tuesday hosted by the Forum Club of the Palm Beaches.

She asked whether federal courts are wrong to bar video cameras since the Supreme Court allows the public to watch oral arguments in person, provides transcripts of the arguments and is known to have "Supreme Court justices going out on book tours."

The audience laughed, but not Scalia, who was promoting a new book.

He snapped back: "That's a nasty, impolite question," then provided a quick defense of the no-camera rule.

Arrests hit high mark during annual Tampa pirate festival

TAMPA — Tampa Police say 141 people were arrested during Tampa's annual pirate festival.

An estimated 350,000 people converged for the Gasparilla celebration.

Police in Tampa and Temple Terrace, as well as the Florida Highway Patrol and the Hillsborough County Sheriff's Office were responsible for 79 of the arrests. Those included two felonies, 73 misdemeanors and four charges of boating under the influence.

What's in the news at colleges around the country

Utah State freshman dies after drinking during hazing

SALT LAKE CITY — About four hours before a Utah State University freshman died of alcohol poisoning, a fraternity member called the Utah Poison Control Center saying Michael Starks had "ingested a little over his limit in alcohol."

A transcript of the recorded call obtained by The Salt Lake Tribune also shows the caller declined to give Starks' name, said he was 21 years old instead of 18, and said the freshman was "pretty drunk" but still awake and alert.

The caller said he wanted information about alcohol poisoning and how best to treat the freshman.

The dispatcher said he should be taken to a hospital if he can't be woken up or if he aspirates vomit.

Starks, a pledge to Sigma Nu fraternity, died Nov. 21. His blood alcohol content was higher than 0.35, more than four times the legal limit to drive an automobile.

A probable cause document said Starks and another pledge were "kidnapped" by sorority members, taken to an off-campus residence and given vodka.

Fellow pledges brought him back to the fraternity house. During the 97-second call to the poison center, placed at about 11:30 p.m. Nov. 20, the caller said Starks had consumed a half-bottle of whiskey.

Four Sigma Nu members and eight Chi Omega sorority members have been charged with misdemeanor hazing in Starks' death.

JONATHAN BIRD / PORT CLINTON NEWS HERALD
Two fishermen remove their gear from a U.S. Coast Guard airboat after being rescued from the ice near Crane Creek State Park in Oak Harbor, Ohio Saturday.

Broken ice floe on Lake Erie strands fishermen for hours

OAK HARBOR, Ohio — Cell phones rang and word was passed to fishermen out on a distant stretch of Lake Erie's iced-over waters: A crack had widened in the ice, trapping everyone on a mile-wide floe that was drifting away from the Ohio shoreline.

Some immediately hopped on their four-wheelers and snowmobiles, headed east in search of an ice bridge back to shore.

The rest simply waited, stranded with their buckets of fish. For entertainment while they waited, one angler dropped a recently hooked walleye — the target catch of the season — back into the water as a group gathered to watch it swim, said fisherman David Hudzinski of Muskego, Wis.

About an hour later, rescuers began arriving in helicopters and lowered baskets onto the ice, and fishermen climbed in and were lifted to safety. Others boarded air boats that glided across the ice.

A Coast Guard spokesman, Chief Petty Officer Robert Lanier, said 134 people had been plucked from the ice by late afternoon. One man fell into the water and later died of an apparent heart attack.

Leslie Love, 65, of New Albany, Ohio, died of an apparent heart attack after his snowmobile broke through the ice while he was searching for a safe place to cross back to shore, according to the Ottawa County sheriff's office.

Love collapsed after he was helped back onto solid ice, the sheriff's office said. A relative performed CPR until a helicopter transported Love to a hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

A second fisherman went into the frigid water when he tried to drive his ATV over a small crack in the ice, Lanier said.

Wildfires in Australia kill 84; 700 homes destroyed

HEALESVILLE, Australia — Towering flames razed entire towns in southeastern Australia and burned fleeing residents in their cars as the death toll rose to 84 on Sunday, making it the country's deadliest fire disaster.

At least 700 homes were destroyed in Saturday's inferno when searing temperatures and wind blasts produced a firestorm that swept across a swath of the country's Victoria state, where all the deaths occurred.

Thousands of exhausted volunteer firefighters were still battling about 30 uncontrolled fires Sunday night in Victoria, officials said, though conditions had eased considerably.

Government officials said the army would be deployed to help out, and Rudd announced immediate emergency aid of $7 million.

Witnesses described seeing trees exploding and skies raining ash on Saturday as temperatures of up 117 F combined with blasting winds to create furnace-like conditions.

Sports Illustrated discovers major player tested positive

NEW YORK — As Barry Bonds prepares to defend his name, the slugger who may eventually surpass him as the all-time home run leader has become ensnared by the Steroids Era: Alex Rodriguez.

Rodriguez tested positive for two anabolic steroids during his MVP season with Texas in 2003, Sports Illustrated reported on its Web site Saturday.

The New York Yankees star has long denied using performance-enhancing drugs. He declined to discuss the tests when approached by SI on Thursday at a gym in Miami.

"You'll have to talk to the union," he said.

Major League Baseball and the players' union issued statements Saturday, refusing to confirm or deny the report, citing player confidentiality.

An e-mail from The Associated Press to Rodriguez's agent, Scott Boras, was not immediately returned. The Yankees and Rangers declined comment.

The SI revelations come at a time when baseball's focus on drugs has concerned Bonds and the legal maneuvering leading to the start of his trial March 2. The government is trying to prove Bonds lied when he told a grand jury he never knowingly took performance-enhancing drugs.

A three-time AL MVP, Rodriguez has hit 553 career homers. At age 33, the All-Star third baseman is the highest-paid player in baseball and regarded by many as the most likely to break Bonds' record of 762.

Kansas Governor near top of list for Health Dept. job

WASHINGTON — Kansas Gov. Kathleen Sebelius was near the top of President Barack Obama's list of candidates to head the Health and Human Services Department, a senior administration official said Saturday.

The source, speaking on the condition of anonymity to discuss private administration deliberations, said no decision was imminent and that other candidates remain in the mix. But the official added the former Kansas insurance commissioner was rising as Obama considers prospective candidates, in no small part on the strength of her close relationship with the president.

Sebelius would be Obama's second choice for the slot. Former Sen. Tom Daschle had to withdraw his name amid an admission he had not paid taxes on a car and driver since leaving Congress as a Democratic leader.

White House spokesman Reid Cherlin on Saturday said no decision had been made.

Sebelius was an early Obama supporter, picking his presidential campaign over that of Hillary Rodham Clinton, now the secretary of state. Sebelius worked tirelessly for Obama's bid and was a top surrogate to women's groups.

Student's novel idea comes in paperback

WILLIAM BUCHANAN
Contributing Writer

Written by age 19 and published at 20, Paper Wristbands is Ashley Darby's first novel. Her taste for darkness frames the party setting. The story: Two college girls, Beth and Trista, try to maintain sanity between work, family and school. When their lives are lacking, self-medication is the prescription. The paperback is available online and in the UCF bookstore. Between bites of Chick-fil-A chicken strips Darby, an English major, answered a few questions.

Q: What is Paper Wristbands really about?

Darby: It's not my type of book to be honest. It's the sort of thing drilled into your head by creative writing professors, 'Write what you know.' So, it's a product of my college experiences.

Q: Is it purely entertainment or is there a message behind it?

Darby: There's really two different reads to it, because there's two main characters. Trista is just for fun, but Beth has a message. Beth is too busy envying others' good actions. She's admiring others and blaming people for what's wrong with her so she doesn't fix herself.

Q: Are your characters based on people in real life or just a mixture of personalities?

Darby: I used other people as the character types, but the stories in the book are mine. I started writing when I was living with this guy, not really dating him yet, but it developed into Trista's relationship. Things happened, and I was like, 'Ah!' and I'd write a chapter.

Q: What got you started on this project?

Darby: I used to make comics about my friends, the situations and funny stuff they'd say. One night I had just gotten home from the bar and wrote the story [of the night] down and thought, 'Hmm, that's an introduction.' It's the part of college you normally don't read about—the grungy side.

Q: Who is your intended audience?

Darby: Probably older high school, younger college kids. 16-19-year-olds. I wrote it for people who are like me. It's not really for the prissy kids. It's the party life you're not getting dressed up for. Beth and Trista aren't going out to make friends; they're going out to get wasted.

Q: Were there obstacles you had to overcome while writing this book?

Darby: I wrote consistently for three months, but then I got really busy at work. A few weeks later deadline was coming up, and I had to finish quick.

Q: What inspired you to write?

Darby: I wanted to do journalism, but it was too competitive. I took creative writing as an elective, just for fun but ended up loving it so I switched majors.

Q: How do you feel about having a published novel?

Darby: It was kind of a practice book—proof that I was capable of writing a whole story. I had no idea it was on the Internet and my friends sent me messages like, 'I just saw your book on Target.com.' I thought, 'Oh my God, that's amazing!' I'm already focused on the next one.

This interview took place on Jan. 28 in the gazebo by the campus bookstore, where you can order a copy of Paper Wristbands. The book is also available online through Amazon.com, Target.com and BarnesandNoble.com.

Physics discourse, no strings attached

MARC SCHEINER
Contributing Writer

Have you ever wondered what the basis of life is? How about small, theoretical vibrating strings of energy that create dimensions beyond our comprehension?

On Friday afternoon, Duke University math and physics professor Paul Aspinwall lectured on string theory and other concepts of mathematical physics in the Nicholson School of Communication Building.

The lecture was part of a series organized to inspire students to increase their understanding of the universe, said Costas Efthimiou, a UCF mathematical physics professor.

Undeclared freshman Melina Licitra said the lecture was a good starting point for discourse among students interested in physics.

"I think it's a positive idea," she said. "It presents an opportunity to spark ingenuity and collaborate thought among students."

During the lecture, called Superstrings and Compactification, Aspinwall spoke about the universe at its most fundamental level.

He said the current laws of physics break down at that level, and string theory attempts to resolve that.

However, because the theory is on such a small scale, it is difficult to experiment with.

Aspinwall also presented his collaborations with other physicists using quantum mechanics to explain the possibility that the universe can change shapes. Based on what is known about universal forces and the science community's technological breakthroughs, ideas such as a shape-shifting universe are no longer works of fiction, he said.

Mathematical physics is the study of nature using advanced mathematics, according to the lecture series' Web site. As human knowledge about nature advances, the need for higher mathematics becomes more necessary.

Since string theory is in its formative stage, little can be attributed to mainstream society, Efthimiou said. There would be no significant difference outside of the lab. If science could apply the very little knowledge that is known, then perhaps people would be more aware of its everlasting benefits, he said.

But string theory is not just limited to the scientific community, because it attempts to answer the "why" questions in life. Another important question: What makes up the physical universe at its most fundamental level?

The lectures help to create a transition from an applied university to a top research institution and provide opportunities for UCF to network in the physics world, Efthimiou said.

The department of physics has been holding the S. Goldman Lectures in Mathematical Physics, sponsored by the Steven Goldman Foundation, since spring of 2008.

Money key issue for all

FROM A1

The election will be Feb. 16 through 18 on myucf.edu.

Mortellaro and Rivard

Yesterday Mortellaro and Rivard urged supporters to canvass around campus and by phone for their campaign at a meeting in the Math and Physics building.

"We can't win this election without your help," said Rivard, the president of National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws at UCF.

So far, Mortellaro and Rivard said they have spent some of their self-funded $3,000 in campaign money on T-shirts to give to students, palm cards that list their platform issues and signs that read "Vote for Stephen and Brendon."

Mortellaro, a Senator and co-chair on UCF's Progressive Council, said they have not received any campaign donations but that they are endorsed by the College Democrats, NORML at UCF, the Caribbean Students' Association, Eco-Advocates of Central Florida, Campus Peace Action at UCF and Knights 4 Change.

Some of the campaign events they planned for this week could bring in donations, Mortellaro and Rivard said.

Mortellaro and Rivard will have events this Tuesday at Medici's Cigar Bar & Lounge at 8 p.m. and Wednesday at 8 p.m. at Knight Klub.

They said the events will give them an opportunity to listen to student issues while still having fun.

Mortellaro said if elected, he and Rivard would increase the student voice on campus, fight against tuition increase and rescue the Bright Futures scholarship program.

"If we are going to see a tuition increase, we want to ensure academic quality goes up and not just the cost of attending university goes up," Mortellaro said.

Mortellaro said he is already head of a higher education taskforce whose purpose is to educate students on the funding problems for the Bright Futures scholarship and to inform them of tuition and fee increases.

"We will then invite all students to participate in constructing a proposal to reform the Bright Futures Scholarship Program," he said. "By doing so, we will ensure that the student voice is heard on the issue of Bright Futures and that our government is not simply dictating to us the future of our scholarship program."

Stein and Peckham

Stein said his biggest campaign tactic this week will be speaking to as many student organizations as possible. He said he's already spoken with NORML, the African American Student Union and the Panhellenic Council.

The campaign has already begun putting up signs incorporating its "One Step Closer" theme.

The campaign will also begin giving away T-shirts with fill-in-the-blanks where students can write in their opinions on what needs to get done at UCF.

Stein said most of the campaign's resources were donated. For example, its Web site, andrewchace.com, is run by friends, and Hummus House will be donating food, he said.

Monetary donations from family and friends have amounted to, "a few hundred dollars," said Stein, SGA's Public Relations Coordinator.

In keeping with the other candidates, Stein said he would use his position on the UCF Board of Trustees to voice his opposition to tuition increases and implement green initiatives.

Peckham, who is president of the Interfraternity Council, has been working on clarifying the university's definition of hazing, Stein said. The campaign also wants to create a timeline for finishing Greek Park II.

Last week, Stein and Peckham were charged with four violations of campaigning rules for setting up their Web site too early. They were found to have made two minor violations by SGA's Election Commission. By SGA rules, if they make one more violation, they are disqualified.

Stein said he was, "very upset," by this because he had asked the Election Commission for prior permission to put up the Web site.

"It's like a cop telling you you can park somewhere and coming back and giving you a ticket," he said.

Peterson and Lewis

More than 70 students rallied together to support and listen to the candidates' campaign at the Southside Bar and Grill on campus.

Peterson and Lewis elaborated on their campaign plans as student body leaders, including ways to improve campus life, how to help students exceed academically and plans to make UCF more environmentally sustainable.

One of the candidates' platform points is to help promote and expand security on campus. Lewis and Peterson's main concern are the blue light emergency posts.

"I see blue lights blinking, and no one there to respond to them," Lewis said.

Peterson also appeared concerned about a blue light he saw flashing for hours.

"It's supposed to be your security," Peterson said. "That's a huge issue."

The candidates hope to improve campus security measures by confirming that emergency procedures are working correctly for student safety.

Peterson and Lewis also spoke about using renewable energy on campus.

Peterson spoke about using solar panels to help power our university after a technique he saw at Florida Gulf Coast University.

"We should be doing this," Peterson said.

The candidates also spoke to students about protecting Bright Futures for students.

It is still vague on how the candidates will be able to preserve a state scholarship.

The candidates also pledged to create more free printing labs on campus for students to use and help increase the amount of affordable housing for students.

The candidates also hope to expand SGA to the Rosen College and other regional colleges across Florida.

The gym expansion is another task that Peterson and Lewis plan to oversee, as well as creating new tailgating procedures with the help of student input.

The candidates also plan on creating more campus study days for students before finals and increase the hours the UCF Library remains open.

Peterson spoke about creating more student-based scholarships, focusing more attention on individual academic colleges, and more study spaces around campus.

"Without academics, we don't have a school," Peterson said. "SGA tends to forget that."

Recession fills 2-year schools

DAVID TIRRELL-WYSOCKI
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — College freshman Elizabeth Hebert's choice of a four-year school suddenly got too expensive. George Haseltine already has a business degree, but he concluded after several lay-offs that he needed more training to get work.

So, in the middle of this school year, both landed at New Hampshire Technical Institute, which like other community colleges across the country has suddenly grown a lot more crowded.

The two-year schools are reporting unprecedented enrollment increases this semester, driven by students from traditional colleges seeking more bang for their buck and by laid-off older workers.

But community colleges aren't exactly cheering in this down economy: Tuition doesn't come close to covering costs, and the state funds used to make up the difference are drying up.

Final figures aren't in for this semester, but a national group representing community colleges says the average increase from spring to spring is dramatic, and similar to what New Hampshire is reporting at its seven schools — a range of 4 percent to 19 percent.

The figure is 20 percent in Maine and South Carolina. One school in Idaho has more than twice the number of students this spring over last.

Nationwide, the average annual cost of community college is $2,402, compared to $6,585 in tuition and fees at in-state public four-year schools, according to the College Board. Average tuition and fees for private four-year schools: $25,143.

New Hampshire is marketing the transfer trend.

"I was going to a much larger school out of state and paying $45,000 a year to go there," straight-A business major Elizabeth Leone says in a TV ad. "I am getting a better experience here at NHTI and it's more affordable and closer to home."

Leone transferred last fall after racking up $20,000 in loans and putting $5,000 more on credit cards for her first year at college in Pennsylvania. She couldn't imagine how much more she would have had to borrow to return.

Going to a community college doesn't require giving up on hopes for a bachelor's degree, since credits often transfer to four-year schools.

Several community colleges can trace a bump in enrollment to area layoffs.

In Boise, Idaho, after semiconductor maker Micron Technology laid off 1,500 workers, 243 students enrolled at the Larry Sell and College of Applied Technology for this spring, more than double last spring's enrollment.

Tuition covers just 25 percent of the cost of education in Maine's system. Other community colleges vary, but all depend on counties or states that in many cases are cutting their funding.

Maine reported spring enrollment increases of 20 percent, after laying off employees and leaving vacant positions open to cope with a $2.9 million state cut. At Wake Technical Community College in North Carolina, the president and two vice presidents are teaching classes because of a $2.3 million cut last fall.

Arizona community colleges have absorbed $19.3 million in cuts and may lose all remaining state aid, said Norma Kent, spokeswoman at the American Association of Community Colleges. Some systems have had to reject thousands of applicants, she said.

"Community colleges are built on access, so for us to turn someone away is like a surgeon saying 'I won't operate on someone who is having a heart attack,'" Kent said.

Community colleges hope the impending federal economic stimulus plan will help keep the doors open. Competing House and Senate versions include billions of dollars for Pell Grant financial aid, long-delayed facility improvements and expansions and job retraining programs.

Florida. Points can be earned by starting a ONE blog or student group.

Nabid said he got involved with the Campus Challenge after watching a YouTube video on the Future Business Leaders of America Web site.

"After viewing it, I was inspired to help out," he said. "The great part about this challenge is that we don't ask for money, but we just ask for your voice. It's unlike anything that has been seen before. As students we are challenged, become better educated and take action."

Most of his initiatives for the challenge, such as recruiting members to the mailing list, were done with business fraternity Phi Beta Lambda's campus chapter and online through mediums such as Facebook.

Nabid said he hopes to start hosting events for the UCF ONE chapter soon. Some of the potential activities include bringing in guest speakers and concerts in conjunction with local schools such as Valencia Community College.

The summit includes appearances by the chief executive of FEED Projects Lauren Bush and ABC television host Jake Sasseville, according to the event's Web site.

Today, the last day of the summit, Nabid will participate in a lobby day on Capitol Hill with lawmakers and state representatives to push for legislation.

College students have tremendous energy and creativity to bring to the fight against extreme poverty and preventable disease, actor and Shoe4Africa chairman Anthony Edwards said in the event's press release.

Carl Blencke, a UCF management professor and Phi Beta Lambda's adviser, said he sees that energy and creativity in Nabid.

"He is a credit to the organization and to UCF, a great example of student leadership," Blencke said. "It's an honor to have a PBL member so dedicated to a cause like this one. It'll be interesting to see the ideas he comes back with and how he will implement them."

In March, the 10 schools with the most points in the ongoing Campus Challenge will receive $1,000 grants for event programming at their institution. The first-place school will host a grand prize event on their campus.

Phi Beta Lambda president and mechanical engineering sophomore Kristopher Garcia said Nabid was the right choice to represent UCF at the summit.

"Tahsin is our [PBL] state secretary and he always provides hard work. I think he'll represent our chapter and university well," he said.

Before he left for the summit Nabid said, "I am going to represent UCF to my fullest potential and show all of the other 99 student leaders and guests that we as Knights don't just care about ourselves, but we also care about our community, our state, our nation and even our world."

Track combines variety of fields

said Harrington. "We wanted to do a separate degree, but that goes through Tallahassee, and they said that a track was the way to get that started."

Harrington's colleague, associate professor Daniel Britt was one of the driving forces behind this process.

"We had a number of planetary science faculty here and wanted a graduate program for planetary sciences so that we could produce graduate students in that specialty," Britt said.

The interdisciplinary nature of planetary science allows for the accommodation of student with various research backgrounds ranging from physics and astronomy to meteorology and oceanography.

While there are only six students currently in this track the professors expect the track to grow to accommodate more researchers.

A Bachelor of Science is required for admission into the limited access track.

Harrington is currently using the Spitzer Space Telescope, a NASA telescope that orbits the sun behind Earth, to observe how planets behave around their stars.

"What we do is look for planets that go behind their stars and watch and measure the amount of light that we receive before, during and after the event," Harrington said.

Meanwhile, Britt's research involves "using the tools of remote sensing to determine the composition and evolution of solar system objects, including asteroids, comets and Mars," according to his online biography.

These are just a few examples of the type of research that takes place in the planetary sciences field. Provost research professor Humberto Campins, another faculty member involved in the track, is currently studying small bodies in the solar system with funding from NASA, according to the Web site.

Britt said planetary science needs its own concentration because it is different from other types of space science.

"If you're interested in doing planetary sciences, that's a specialty that's really outside of what is taught in the physics or astronomy department," Britt said. "It's an entirely different field, but it's a pretty strong field. There are not as many places where you can get that kind of training, and this is one of them."

The UCF Women's Basketball team used a strong second-half effort to beat the SMU Mustangs 78-68 in the UCF Arena on Saturday night.

The Knights (10-13 overall, 8-2 in Conference USA) trailed 36-35 at the half and were down 40-35 less than a minute into the second half, but they battled back to beat the defending C-USA Tournament champions and stay undefeated at home in conference play.

Pirates near perfect, hand UCF another loss

BRIAN MURPHY
Staff Writer

Sometimes, it just doesn't matter what type of defense a team plays or the personnel it puts on the court.

Sometimes, there is just no answer for a hot hand and that is exactly what the UCF Men's Basketball team fell prey to during its 89-75 loss to East Carolina on Saturday night in Greenville, N.C.

The Pirates drilled 15 of 24 3-point attempts, tying the school record for 3-pointers made in a conference game. Overall, ECU shot 63 percent from the field.

"Most of the time, we had hands in their face, fouling them and everything," UCF guard Jermaine Taylor said about the Pirates' shooters, "but [the shots] were still going in."

The Pirates scorched the Knights' zone defense all night. That defense may have been better if point guard A.J. Rompza hadn't missed the game with a sprained ankle.

But even Rompza's toughness and attitude probably would not have been enough to stop a Pirates squad that, according to ECU head coach

Mack McCarthy in a postgame radio interview, played "very close to as good as we can play." It was the first win for the Pirates in 10 meetings with UCF.

The Knights (15-8 overall, 5-4 in Conference USA) began to lose sight of the Pirates with about 4 minutes remaining in the first half. That is when ECU (12-10, 4-5 in C-USA) began a 14-6 run that extended their lead from two to 10 and gave the home team a 43-33 advantage going into the half.

The Knights would see their deficit drop into single digits for just 48 seconds in the second half. That's because the Pirates shooters always had an answer.

The UCF Track and Field team took four of the top five spots in the 3,000-meter run Saturday at the Jimmy Carnes Indoor Track and Field Meet in Gainesville.

Jamie Rzepecki came in first with a time of 10:27.72.

This is the second time this indoor season Rzepecki crossed the line before anyone else. She was also a part of the distance medley relay team that came in first earlier this season at the Tom Jones Memorial Invitational.

On the road, men lose two, women split a pair

The UCF Men's and Women's Tennis teams had mixed results over the weekend.

The men's side fell to the No. 7 Florida Gators in Gainesville 6-1 on Thursday and the following day lost a 4-3 decision to the Clemson Tigers in Miami.

With the pair of losses the men fell to 3-3 on the season after winning their previous three matches.

The women's team traveled to Boca Raton on Saturday and defeated the FAU Owls 6-1. The UCF women (2-2) were back on the winning side with a commanding performance.

Freshman Andrea Yacaman won at the No. 2 spot 6-1, 6-2. Sophomore Jenny Frisell won 6-2, 6-2 at the No. 3 spot. Freshman Alexis Rodriguez won 6-2, 6-2 at the No. 4 spot. At the No. 5 spot senior Kenza Belbacha won 6-4, 6-2 and junior Katie Orletsky won at the No. 6 spot 6-2, 6-1.

The only loss came at the No. 1 spot, as senior Elvira Serrot was defeated in a third-set tie breaker 4-6, 6-1, 1-0 (12-10). The Knights took the doubles matchup with two wins.

On Sunday, the women were outmatched against No. 13 Miami, falling 6-1.

They will try to rebound at home on Friday against Georgia Southern.

The men had similar results against the 7th-ranked Gators, with their only victory in Gainesville coming from freshman Eugene Dolgovykh at the No. 5 spot 7-6 (7-1), 6-3.

CAITLIN BUSH / CENTRAL FLORIDA FUTURE
Freshman Joe Delinks, seen here against North Florida, and Johan Beigart won their doubles match 8-5 against Clemson on Friday, but UCF lost the match 4-3.

After being swept in doubles competition, junior Johan Beigart lost at the No. 1 spot 6-2, 6-2. Senior Terek Ben Soltane fell 6-2, 6-2 at the No. 2 spot.

Sophomore Blaze Schwartz fell at the No. 3 spot 6-1, 6-0 to 63rd-ranked Joey Burkhardt. On court four, junior Marc Rocafort lost 6-2, 6-3. At the No. 6 spot senior Danny Colon was defeated 6-2, 6-4.

On Friday the men fought hard but lost in a close matchup to the Tigers. The doubles set was the deciding factor after the teams split the singles competition.

Beigart lost 4-6, 6-2, 6-4 at the No. 1 spot. Soltane took a win at the No. 2 spot 6-2, 6-1. Schwartz won on court three, 2-6, 7-5, 6-3.

At the No. 4 spot Rocafort took a 6-3, 6-4 winner. Dolgovykh fell in the No. 5 spot 6-4, 6-2. Colon lost at the No. 6 spot, 7-5, 6-1.

The doubles result was a 2-1 victory in favor of the Tigers, giving them the overall win.

ance against Tulsa on Thursday, rebounded in grand fashion against SMU. Wiley scored 20 of her game-high 26 points in the first half.

"I was still looking for my shot," Wiley said of her mind-set against the Mustangs. "Good shooters have short memories."

Sophomore forward Emma Cannon did not have much luck with her shot — she finished with 14 points on 5-of-14 shooting — but she made up for it with her tenacity on the boards, grabbing 20 rebounds for the second time this season.

"I wasn't making shots in the beginning," Cannon said. "I just wanted that ball, and that's what I did."

As a team, the Knights shot 53 percent in the second half and held the Mustangs to 37 percent from the field.

But it was a different story before the break.

In the first half, nine SMU players scored, and the Mustangs were 3-of-4 on their 3-pointers.

To counter an efficient Mustangs attack, the Knights went to a press defense at the start of the second half, a maneuver that helped cause 12 SMU turnovers after the break.

"We felt like we wanted to go to a press," Williams said of the adjustment.

Although Cannon and Wiley normally step up for the Knights, Williams said it was some key contributions off the bench that solidified the victory.

Sophomore guard Jelisa Caldwell played point guard for several minutes, spelling Angelica Mealing and Marshay White, both of whom were in foul trouble for most of the game.

"[Caldwell] played the point in high school,"

HOMETOWN HEROES

The Knights are 6-0 in conference play at the UCF Arena, with an average margin of victory of more than 10 points in those wins.

WINLESS NO MORE

Before the 2008-09 season, UCF was winless all-time against Southern Miss, SMU and East Carolina.

Williams said, "so we knew she could do it."

Also stepping up off the bench was sophomore guard D'Nay Daniels, who played 15 minutes and had 7 points, three assists and four offensive rebounds.

On Thursday, the Knights beat the Tulsa Golden Hurricane 72-69, UCF's smallest margin of victory this season since a 2-point win against Florida A&M on Nov. 21.

The Knights trailed 28-33 at the half, but they shot 53 percent in the second half to rally back for the victory.

Mealing led the Knights with 20 points on 5-of-9 shooting, and she was 4-of-4 on her 3-pointers. Amber Kirkpatrick added 15 points, and Cannon also had 15 points to go with nine rebounds.

Although the Knights had the comforts of home for the past several games, they now have to hit the road for a four-game stretch.

"Going on the road, we've got to make sure our defense comes with us," Williams said. "The true sign of a championship team is winning on the road."

The road trip starts Friday in Huntington, W.Va., against Marshall at 7 p.m.

UTEP's high-scoring offense up next for UCF

FROM A9

UCF center Kenrick Zondervan finished off a 3-point play with 5:53 remaining that cut the Pirates' lead down to 76-67.

But just 16 seconds later, ECU forward Jamar Abrams came back with another long-range basket for C-USA's leading team in 3-point field goals. Abrams led East Carolina with a career-high 25 points on 10-of-12 shooting.

Zondervan scored a career-high 19 points and UCF forward Tony Davis notched his fifth double-double of the season with 13 points and 12 rebounds.

Zondervan and Davis combined to grab 10 offensive rebounds. That was one of the few positive statistics for the Knights on Saturday.

UCF recorded 25 offensive rebounds and outscored the Pirates 30-10 in second-chance points. But even though the Jermaine Taylor has led the Knights in scoring in 18 consecutive games.

BLOCK PARTY

ECU center Chad Wynn recorded five blocks against UCF.

BALL CONTROL

UCF's Taylor Young is second in C-USA play in assist-to-turnover ratio.

Knights took 30 more shots than their opponent, they were held to just 36.8 percent shooting.

Taylor rallied late in the game to post a respectful 24-point showing. But for the game's first 29 minutes, Taylor was just off-target.

Facing stiff defense from ECU's Sam Hinnant and Jontae Sherrod, Taylor missed 12 of his first 14 shots. The Pirates praised their defenders for locking down the conference's best scorer, but Taylor said the reason for his poor shooting was more about himself than anything the Pirates did.

"I think that my shot just wasn't on tonight," he said. "I missed a lot of easy layups. I missed a lot of easy shots. I think I forced some at times."

Rompza's absence may have also made the going harder for Taylor. Without Rompza, who ranks third in the conference in assists per game, the Knights didn't have a player who could cut hard to the basket, draw defenses down and find open shooters on the wing, such as Taylor.

And without Rompza's tough, on-the-ball defense, ECU point guard Brock Young picked apart the Knights for 12 points and nine assists.

As a team, the Pirates had 23 assists on 29 baskets.

The Knights have given up 186 points in their past two games and their schedule doesn't do them any favors. Another high-octane offense awaits as the Knights travel to UTEP to face the Miners on Wednesday.

UTEP (13-9 overall, 4-4 in C-USA) ranks second in the conference with an average of 76.8 points per game and is led by senior guard Stefon Jackson. He is second in Conference USA in points per game and became the conference's all-time leading scorer on Jan. 31.

Rompza is questionable for the contest against UTEP, but Taylor said that his team just has to keep fighting through these difficult times.

"I think we're just missing that fight on defense," he said. "We're getting to that point of the season where I think everybody's tired, everybody's got little nicks and bruises and everything. We don't have that extra step on defense."

"We have a young team. I don't think they are used to feeling what they are feeling right now. It's college basketball, so we've just got to toughen it out."

Rain cancels final game

FROM A9

Sophomore Diana Rojas pitched 2.2 innings in relief, giving up four hits and five earned runs with two strikeouts and four walks.

The Knights defense was error-prone, committing three errors on the afternoon.

After losing the first game of the Classic, UCF focused on the Pac-10's best, No. 2 Arizona State. The Knights lost a close matchup against the Sun Devils 10-7 at Alberta B. Farrington Softball Stadium on the campus of Arizona State.

Hillary Barrow provided the Knights with a home run and three RBIs. Perez also added a home run with two hits and an RBI. Freshman Natalie Land had a hit with two RBIs and Bullard added an RBI on one hit.

The defending national champions got out of the box with a quick start, leading 7-1 through three innings and 9-3 after the fourth. Trailing 10-3 going into the final inning of play, UCF showed life, scoring four runs to narrow the lead to three, but it was not enough.

Junior pitcher Ashleigh Cole gave up seven earned runs on seven hits and had a strike out and four walks in three innings of work. Senior Magon Paul came in to relieve Cole, pitching three innings and giving up three earned runs and five hits, while striking out two and walking two batters.

In the second day of action, UCF picked up its first win of the season when the Knights beat Oklahoma State 8-5 at the Tempe Sports Complex.

Land brought fire and power, going deep with the home run and two RBIs. Senior catcher Lindsay Dean came up with two RBIs of her own.

Javier contributed with two hits and an RBI. Barrow and Perez each contributed with a hit and an RBI for the Knights.

UCF led 6-2 after three innings and secured the win. Paul pitched 6.1 innings, giving up four earned runs on six hits and walking four batters.

In the final game of Saturday's doubleheader UCF was thumped by Western Michigan 10-1. The Knights trailed the Broncos from the very beginning, going down 5-0 in the first inning. Two innings later Western Michigan attacked again with five runs, pushing the lead to 10-0.

UCF was held to one run, with Javier coming home after a Cole hit in the fourth inning. The Knights' bats were kept silent, with just two hits in the game.

On the mound, Rojas didn't make it past the first inning. She faced seven batters, giving up five earned runs on three hits and two walks.

DeMello entered the game and pitched 2.1 innings in relief, giving up five earned runs on six hits and two walks.

Sunday's game against No. 11 Stanford was canceled due to heavy rain in the Tempe region.

Up next for UCF Softball is the home opener, a doubleheader on Wednesday against UNF at the UCF Softball Complex.

The first game is slated for a 3 p.m. start.

Two meets next weekend

FROM A9

Eight other athletes would also post top-10 finishes on the day.

Kelsey Poljansek once again flirted with her own school record in the shot put. After three consecutive weeks of setting records, Poljansek finished third this week with a toss of 49.39 meters, only 0.03 meters from breaking the record.

LaKendra Thomas just missed the top five in the shot put, finishing sixth with a throw of 11.61 meters.

Katrina Skinner came in fourth in the mile run with a time of 5:18.79, while Kathia Skinner finished third in the 800-meter, crossing the line in 2:20.37.

Carly Dart joined Katrina Skinner finishing ninth in the mile with a time of 5:24.53.

Freshman Jacquelyn Gilchrist had a leap of 5.41 meters in the long jump, good enough for fourth in the event.

Olinka Crusoe and Natalie Braddock broke into the top 10 in the 400-meter. Crusoe came in ninth at 1:00.32 and Braddock 10th finishing in 1:00.74, a personal best time for her.

UCF will compete in two different meets next weekend with some of the team headed to Fayetteville, Ark., to participate in the Tyson Invitational on Friday and Saturday. The rest of the team will travel to compete in the UNC Invitational on Saturday in Chapel Hill, N.C.

The Conference USA Indoor Championships are now less than a month away.

They will be held in Houston from Feb. 27-28.

SGA ethics code is too vague

"I can eliminate any position whenever I want," SGA President Logan

Berkowitz said about his decision to remove former student advocacy director and current vice presidential candidate Brendon Rivard from his position.

"I can pick, drop positions at my discretion. That's what my role is," Berkowitz said.

However, while a cursory glance at the SGA ethics code reveals that is not, in fact, what Berkowitz's "role is," he is not far off.

The ethics code requires only that the executive give some reason for removing a position.

That means that no matter how feeble the general student body may feel Berkowitz's reasoning was for removing the position, it is clear that he had the authority to do so.

The timing of the move is questionable, with SGA elections on the horizon, especially considering that Rivard is a candidate for vice president.

It seems inappropriate to remove a candidate from office during an election without detailed, specific reasons for doing so.

Berkowitz eliminated the entire job of student advocacy director with a striking lack of concern for its importance.

He cited numerous personal concerns about Rivard.

He named few if any concerns about the position itself.

In doing so, he showed that he sees the extent of his authority as permission to do whatever he pleases within the bounds of what he can get away with.

Which brings us to the more important aspect of this recent turn of events: The fact that Berkowitz and his "any position whenever I want" approach is tacitly sanctioned by the exceedingly vague SGA code of ethics.

Under the current SGA code of ethics, the president is free to remove or alter the duties of such positions without the approval of the Senate.

Appointments to those same positions require the Senate's approval.

Rivard was subject to a confirmation vote when he accepted the position of student advocacy director less than four months ago.

He was fired last week via e-mail, without the approval or even consultation of the Senate or anyone but Berkowitz.

Both proceedings were more or less in line with current SGA statutes.

So can we really blame Berkowitz for his brash approach to governance when the ethics codes of his organization give him free reign?

While he may not have violated the ethics code to the letter, he has clearly violated the spirit of that document.

It is unlikely that anyone, shy of South Park's Eric Cartman, who read the ethics code would derive from it the attitude of "any position whenever I want."

But history has shown that the only reliable way to ensure that those in power adhere to ethical practices is to put measures in place that make them do so.

If you're going to ask the SGA president for reasons, you must also lay out exactly what reasons are acceptable and who gets to decide.

Famed 19th century historian and moralist Lord John Acton once said, "Power tends to corrupt, and absolute power corrupts absolutely."

While Berkowitz does not have absolute power, he clearly has enough to be influenced, if not corrupted by it.

Students who feel that ethical reform is necessary in SGA should feel free to contact their senator, but any such action would likely take longer than the remainder of Berkowitz's term.

More important is that, as the next round of SGA elections begins to ramp up, students listen carefully to the positions and beliefs of the candidates.

Students should ask tough questions and try to get past the slogans, promises and free pizza to find out how the candidates will make use of the power that they seek.

Berkowitz's actions have shown the real power of the position that will soon be up for grabs. It will be up for students to show the real power of their vote when the polls open and they have the opportunity to choose his replacement.

Shut up writer, the commercials are on

As I sat in a friend's living room last Sunday, surrounded by foods with varying amounts of cheese and with friends at varying levels of sobriety, and watched what turned out to be a Super Bowl for the ages, I noticed a trend that perplexed me and my super-fan sensibilities.

From the opening kickoff through the end of the first drive, we bickered, yelled at the screen and debated heatedly every play and every decision made by both sides.

Then the pictured faded, and switched from entertainment to advertisement, and I made the mistake of continuing to talk.

"Shut up, Weiner," shouted at least a dozen angry voices. Confused, I turned to the person nearest to me. "Shhh," he whispered, "the commercials are starting."

It is official. We now live in a world where it is acceptable to talk over the Super Bowl but not over the dancing lizards that sell energy drinks during the break.

The score is now commercialism 1, society 0.

The pattern continued for the remainder of the game, as we die-hard fans all talked through the game and watched the commercials with intensity.

During the aforementioned lizard commercial, some of those present, all of whom were adults, actually pulled out cardboard 3-D glasses that they had obtained for the occasion.

I like commercials as much as the next guy, or at least I thought I did, but that scene seemed like it had gone too far.

That is until last Tuesday, when UCF students turned out in droves to watch Tiger Woods shave.

JEFF WEINER
Opinions Editor

The pro golfer and Gillette spokesperson joined others sports icons at the UCF Arena for the Gillette — EA SPORTS Champions of Gaming finals.

The event, which boiled down to a shameless marketing drive of a scale that would make even a GoDaddy.com girl blush, gave students a chance to witness the greatest athletes of this generation as they promoted products and played video games.

Score one more for commercialism.

There is nothing wrong with a company advertising a product during some form of entertainment.

But when we blur the line between the two, when entertainment and advertisement become almost indistinguishable and we sell the creativity of a society to the highest bidding body spray, don't we sell a little bit of our soul in the process?

Speaking of the soul of our society, I write this column fully aware that we are fast approaching the most commercial of the so-called Hallmark holidays.

Next Saturday is Valentine's Day, the only day of the year that our devotion to our loved ones is quantified by the price tag on a large stuffed animal.

Which is fine, I guess, if you can afford to spend the big bucks on a pink bear that was made for pennies in Mexico, but doesn't that turn a holiday that's supposed to be about love into a crap-buying competition?

Shouldn't we be watching Tiger Woods play golf, instead of watching him groom himself? And isn't it the game, not the commercials, that we really came to see?

Lack of parking turns commute into game

This past January, I moved out of Lake Claire and into an off-campus apartment off of Alafaya.

When I made this move, I spoke to several people from the Department of Parking Services who assured me multiple times that there would be enough room on campus for me to park with the sticker I had.

Well, now that I have had an entire month of driving to class to mull it over, I certainly have a few things to say about that.

Not only is there insufficient parking for off-campus students, but insufficient parking for students period. I spend roughly a half hour searching for a place to park every time I arrive on campus.

And I am not the only one.

Students circle around the parking garages like vultures, stalking their unknowing peers in any which direction, hoping they'll quickly arrive at their car and free up a spot.

And don't even think about stealing one who already has another car waiting.

It turns into Mother Nature's survival of the fittest fast, where only the most fearless and aggressive drivers come out on top.

Those left behind are just that: left, to endure the process all over again, only to be late for class and be penalized by professors.

Half-empty faculty parking lots serve as a salivating reminder that we have nowhere to go and little time to do it.

Something must be done here. Where are our front lines?

I think I speak for the entire student body when I say: Helo us.

Please.

Research Park students lack wireless Internet

I'm Dan Dansby, and I'm a third year undergraduate in the B.F.A. Design & Technology in the theatre program.

I'm writing to you on the advice of a CAH (College of Arts and Humanities) senator.

On January 7, 2009, I sent an e-mail to all SGA CAH Senators about the fact that there is no UCF wireless at the theatre offices located off-campus in Research Park.

I received a prompt reply from one of the senators, and we went about trying to figure out why there isn't wireless and how to go about it getting it.

We've contacted all the appropriate departments here at UCF: the Network Operations Center, Internet Help Desk and CAH Technology Office. All efforts proved fruitless.

I pay the same fees as on-campus students, and they receive wireless in almost every building on main campus.

Most of my theatre design classes are held at the offices in Research Park.

It's beyond annoying not being able to access the Internet on my laptop for a university that almost dictates you have an Internet connection to get any work done.

Promising the improbable

Now that the SGA presidential election is near, promises and commitments have been floating around campus. But don't be fooled by some of these polished campaigns.

The candidates for this season's election have adopted platforms to lure in votes, yet students need be warned that a great deal of these issues are beyond the clout of elected executive office. Knowing whether a candidate's premature promises can be trusted or not is a challenge.

Judging whether a candidate will actually accomplish their campaign platforms once in office is even harder.

And because you've just met the candidates, the responsibility of deliberating among them and their issues is all the more difficult. No worries, though.

There are a few simple tricks to tell if candidates could really get their promises to roll if they were elected. For instance, do any of their issues affect students at other colleges simultaneously?

Bright Futures delegation is a fresh example. Sorry to say, but there's little anyone in UCF student government can do about how much Bright Futures will cover if Gov. Charlie Crist's proposal to allow universities to charge differential tuition that won't be covered by the scholarship program passes. Although the executive branch is well capable of holding referendums to vote on statewide issues of the like, they cannot directly affect the cash flow.

Speaking of which, money is a fleeting resource that no organization or department can keep their hands on anymore.

If candidates are making too many claims to financial distribution among organizations, or if the projects they have planned seem too universal to be affordable, expect some empty commitments.

Besides money, some promises are just too far-fetched to attain. Think about how long it would take to enact some of these measures. Remember, candidates are in office only so long, and the intervals between semesters are real dampers for getting things done.

It's not to say candidates will only be able to achieve a portion of their platforms because of the lack of money and time. Plenty of goals can be and have been accomplished.

The candidates aren't even in office yet, so when you're judging them by their promises, go with what's sensible to you.

Go with what's utilitarian. If too many promises are aimed at student organizations that are too specific and student groups that are too few in number compared with the student body, chances are those platforms will be priority, and everyone else will be left with the crumbs of college diplomacy.

Don't let these schoolyard politicians feel like they have to do too much. That will just keep them from earning your vote.

Seek the candidates with promises that are focused and centered. Most of all, seek the candidates who are committed to getting the job done and getting out.

There's been a particular amount of bureaucratic fluff during the past few semesters. After last fall's senatorial race complaints were filed against the Real UCF Ticket because a banner displaying the party's candidates would hang over the MyUCF voting site if the student used the link provided by the party's Web site. The complaints were later dismissed.

With the Web sites of Andrew Stein and Chace Peckham already hanging a cloud over this year's presidential election, students don't need their elected officials biting at each other and promulgating petty distractions.

Either way, many students will probably pick whoever wears the flashiest colors and offers the most pizza.

Hey, sometimes we need more for our stomachs.

Otherwise, for those who want to seriously participate in our university's democracy, this is an opportunity to use your vote to prove the worth of the system.
